Land Rover Discovery 3-Door – 1991

A rare early Discovery with exceptional originality, low mileage and a superb rust-free chassis.

The first-generation Land Rover Discovery has become an icon in its own right. Closely associated with the legendary Camel Trophy adventures of the 1990s, the early three-door models perfectly combine classic Land Rover character with surprising levels of comfort and everyday usability.

This 1991 example is particularly special. It has spent its entire life in Italy, benefiting from a dry and mild climate, and has never been subjected to hard off-road use. As a result, the original chassis remains remarkably clean, solid and completely rust-free.

With only 99,000 kilometres, the car has been very well preserved and remains highly original throughout.

Its desirable three-door body, characteristic Alpine roof windows and period leather-and-cloth interior give it exactly the right early Discovery atmosphere. Behind the wheel, it feels comfortable, relaxed and unmistakably British, with the commanding driving position that made the Discovery such a success from the very beginning.

Finding an early Discovery in this condition is becoming increasingly difficult. Many examples have suffered from corrosion, heavy off-road use or extensive modifications over the years. This car stands out because of its originality, condition and exceptionally well-preserved chassis.

A wonderful opportunity for the Land Rover enthusiast looking for a genuine, unspoilt early Discovery: iconic styling, only 99,000 kilometres, Italian provenance and a beautifully preserved rust-free chassis.
